In this Fidel is a master. His own special way of encouraging the people contributed to the development of this phenomenon. The people have been inspired by him, or until the harshness of capitalist exploitation broke their resistance. That is what happened in March 1962, when the people in the island of Cuba were on the empty. The road is long and full of difficulties. At times, it seems that the people are entering a period of disillusionment. The people would rather stay at home than continue meeting the demands. But as far as initiatives are concerned, I think that the roads of progress are already set and that we can continue and accelerate them. That is why it is very important to choose the right road and to correct the mistakes.

A common argument from the mouths of capitalist ideologists is that for one reason or another does not participate in the revolutionary process, because they do not see the need or the significance of it. They no longer travel completely alone over lost roads. They no longer work in the dark, without seeing their way. They educate themselves. They try to adjust themselves to a new reality, while the former one is disappearing. In this way, the whole society becomes a school and a laboratory. The people are educated through such agencies as the Ministry of Education, through the state television, through the radio, through the newspapers, etc. We are doing everything possible to give work this new meaning. Work is no longer a punishment, a means of coercing the masses to make them work for the benefit of the state. It is still necessary to deepen conscious work. The road of the worker is long and hard, but it is not a burden. Work is a reward in some cases, a means of promoting the individual's quality of incompleteness, of making him a whole individual. It is still necessary to reflect on the meaning of life and the value of work.
